

Daily Reading: Transformed

Today I am choosing to allow God to transform me by changing the way I think. Transformation results by allowing God, through His Word, to renew my mind becoming who and what He intended for me to be. This new way of thinking goes much deeper than simply changing my behaviors. This is a process of transformation and the key to this transformation is my mind. For my mind is the control center of all of my attitudes, thoughts, feelings and actions. My thoughts lead to feelings and feelings lead to actions.

I am what I choose to do and I choose to form a new habit that will transform me today and everyday hereafter. The habit of transformation that I begin today is this: I will go over this daily reading each morning when I begin my day. I will do this every day for one week then I will move on to the next daily reading continuing this same pattern until I have completed all fifty-two readings. At the end of this process, I will have developed a daily habit that will last a lifetime, a habit that will allow God to transform me by changing the way I think. Today I am choosing to allow God to transform me by changing the way I think.

As I do, I will enjoy the rich and satisfying life that Jesus came to give me. My relationships with God and others will be more fulfilling. My work will be more rewarding and I will be more valuable to those I serve in every area of my life. I will have peace of mind in every situation. I will have a renewed sense of God's power in and through me. My purpose will be the hallmark of all I do. I will begin to understand and live more fully in the hope that He has called me to the riches of His glorious inheritance and incomparable power working in and through me.

As I begin this journey I recognize that today is a new day with new life and new opportunities. With the dawn of this morning came a new beginning. God has given me new mercies and an abundance of His grace. This is not a journey I take alone. I am not depending on my own strength for the success of this journey. I am depending on the power of God. As this transformation takes place, I will discover God's plans for my life; His good, pleasing and perfect will for me. Today I am choosing to allow God to transform me by changing the way I think.
